

A Coastal Field Excursion

24th August 2024

If you are attending the International Geographical Congress 2024, plan your travel so that you can attend our one-day coastal field excursion!
The excursion will take place on 24th August 2024 from 09:30 – 17:00. You can be dropped off in good time for the Opening Ceremony of the Congress. It will introduce participants to some of the flood and erosion prone low-lying coastal environments of Dublin Bay and to an example of Ireland's east coast bar-built estuaries. This coast is both highly urbanized and protected under international and national nature conservation designations, offering a plethora of challenges for the 21st Century and beyond, as human pressures need to be negotiated around space required for nature.
The trip is offered by the Commission on Coastal Systems of the International Geographical Congress.

To register interest and be included in any further email circulations with registration details, as well as for questions regarding this event, please contact Iris Möller at moelleri@tcd.ie. Registrations for the trip will open in April-May 2024.

We look forward to hearing from you!

Sandy cliff erosion, Portrane beach September 2021 (left); Salt marshes of Rogerstown estuary (right)